
Example 1 – How to enjoy your current job

Michelle was an Office Manager for a construction company who was not enjoying her workplace. I gave her constant support / advice over a few weeks .

Outcome - Simply having someone to turn to gave Michelle confidence to talk with her supervisor to cut back her long hours and create a 'courteous zone' and a happy workspace

Example 2 - Using Interests and School subjects to discover direction

Heidi was 20 and dreamed of living in Europe. Her favourite subject was Biology and she was Captain of her school football team. She was interested in working in Events or as a Flight Attendant, but both these jobs are hard to break into, so I explained to Heidi that if she studied Health Sciences (let's say physiotherapy) then she would be viewed favourably by -

- An events management company – specializing in sporting events
- Or a European country with a shortage of Physiotherapists

Or BOTH!

Example 3 - Using your Hobby to find a new job

Kim was looking for a simple job. But she was not 'opening up' to me. I persevered and eventually found out origami was her hobby (folding paper to make miniature animals).

Outcome - I easily found her a job wrapping boutique chocolates, she was very happy and the pay was well above the award as very few people could work with her speed and precision.

Example 4 - Using your personality to find a new job

David was a welder going nowhere in his job, David had the Gift of the Gab, so he was a perfect candidate for being a Salesperson within his own industry. But he was suspicious of Salespeople - until - we had an Indepth talk about what 'Selling' really means (I explained that 'Selling' is simply providing new opportunities for people) and that selling is a fun job

Outcome - He is now the State Sales Manager in the same company.

Example 5 - Continuous phone calls to Employers

Lyn had her own restaurant in Thailand, but was finding her broken English a barrier to finding work.

Outcome - I continually phoned cafes and truthfully explained Lyn's situation. I found a Café owned by a business woman that took annual vacations to Thailand and loved the Thai culture. Lyn started the next day.

Example 6 – Visiting employers with you to build your confidence

Marion was a financial planner who had been out of the workforce for 10 years. To restart her career we walked into finance companies and asked about Administration positions. Most of the companies reacted positively to our visit and Marion's confidence skyrocketed. Marion started work 2 weeks later.
