

Faith in humans restored

AMIDST all the drudgery and complaints we regularly see and hear about in our modern media it is with great pleasure that we relay to you and your readers a shining light and a completely satisfying experience we had with one of your publication's clients.

In the past week, we took on the major task of moving our very elderly parents into a granny flat in Cedar Vale from their home of more than 50 years in Sunnybank.

Their life at Sunnybank had become akin to living in a fortress, where windows and doors remained locked at all times to avoid intruders.

We contacted a local business from Buccan after reading their special promotion in the Jimboomba Times to remove our parents' goods and chattels to their new home this week.

They turned what could have been one of the most traumatic experiences into an absolute pleasure.

From the outset, our first call to the company was met with compassion and kindness.

They arrived on time, and when they said they would, to inspect and quote.

Their quote was less than half the price of larger Brisbane-based firms and they turned up to carry out the task precisely when they said they would.

A wonderful kind lady spent 12 hours on the first day carefully packing, she even individually wrapped a persimmon that my mother had inadvertently left on the kitchen table and it arrived in prime condition.

We advised the principals of the company that our parents were very sensitive to the move and we were left speechless in observing the consideration, courtesy, manners and efficiency of the young men who carried out the task.

This company can stand proud in our local community.

We often hear people say they have had their faith in human nature restored, well, they are out there, it is simply becoming more difficult to find them.
